Slideshows Simplified

Sometimes a one-trick pony is the way to go. Mobile Software Solutions has released EasySlideShow. After downloading the software, users choose and arrange their pictures, select transition effects and speeds, add music, and then are ready to project. The software can run on portable storage devices such as USB flash drives and MP3 players and can be watched on any device that supports the WMV format. A license costs $14.95. It can be found at www.cososys.com.

Electronic Padlocks

For security beyond normal lock and key protection, try CyberLock padlocks from Videx. The units have electronic components that can be programmed to respond only to matching electronic keys. They can be restricted to open only for certain users and only on certain days and times, and they keep an access record. The Hockey Puck model ($223) has a stainless steel body and anti-drilling features built into its core, and the buried shackle prevents attacks from bolt cutters. The Bar Bell model ($223) has a stainless steel core and locking post, and is environmentally sealed with "O" rings to prevent water and dirt from reaching its inner core. See more at www.videx.com.

HAL's Little Brother

Here's a fun way to freak out intruders. The Ground Observing Reconnaissance Transmitter (GORT) from Cross Point Industries is equipped with a motion detector and high-powered light. When activity is detected, the light turns on and rotates to follow the intruder. Security cameras can be attached to the unit for remote monitoring, and an alert message can be added to inform security personnel when the unit is activated. Suggested retail price is $2,500.
